

HBM-020: Understanding Human Trafficking

Lifelong Learning Online Course Syllabus

Instructors: Christa Wiens
Email: christa@justiceco.org
Website: www.justiceco.org

Target Audience: Professionals, social workers, teachers, church leaders, etc.
Course Access: <https://connect.fresno.edu>

Course Description: Based on ten years of experience combating sex and labor trafficking in the Central Valley, this course will expose participants to the current realities of trafficking in California and beyond. Participants will understand the definition of human trafficking and how it differs from other forms of exploitation, discover the factors which create vulnerabilities that lead to victimization, and explore the means of manipulation that traffickers employ. With a clearer understanding of the issue, participants will be better equipped to recognize trafficking in their schools and communities, to identify risk factors, and to offer intervention. The knowledge gained in this class will help impact the language and the conversation around trafficking which our current culture promotes.

Note: This course does not provide direct instructor contact; assignments are included in the course to help students process the information learned and will not be evaluated by the instructor.

Required Texts and Course Materials: There is no required book for this course. Relevant online resources that support the course content and encourage further investigation will be available throughout the course assignments. Active hyperlinks are utilized throughout the course and will link to the appropriate information when clicked. These include videos, podcasts, worksheets, online activities, journal articles and other resources.

Canvas: This course will be delivered totally online. Canvas is a web-based learning management system (LMS) that provides students access to online resources, documents, videos, assignments, quizzes, forums, etc. Canvas is easy to learn and has a user-friendly interface.

Course Dates: Self-paced; students may enroll at any time and take up to one year, from the date of registration, to complete assignments.
